Abstract

Family is a small group of people based on marriage or consanguinity, common way of life, moral responsibility and mutual support. The concepts of "society" and "family" are closely related to each other. This connection is seen in the fact that society cannot exist without families, and in turn, the family is formed and survives in a certain society. Social relations between the family and the society have a two-way relationship. Each family operates on the basis of the demands of the community. The development of the society is directly related to the level of formation of the socio-economic and spiritual image of the families that exist in its bosom. For example, if the demands of the social entity on families do not conflict with their interests, on the contrary, if they help to ensure the well-being and peace of families, then the support of social demands by families, the indicator of ensuring their actual implementation will be higher.

Key words: family, social mission, family relations, marriage, parents

Introduction:

A person's destiny, success or failure in his future life, happiness or unhappiness, choice of profession, even his mood, is related to his family environment. The fate of the family depends on the person himself. It is an ancient fact that the moral image of society depends on the type of families. Because the family is a socio-spiritual link of the society, a small representative, and the present day and the future of our nation are built on the family ground. If there is discipline in the family, its members transfer these qualities to the service process and use them in social work activities. This causes them to perform their duties at a high level.

The family is built on the basis of morality, politeness, hard work, it is very important in relations and communication between people, and it is of particular importance in the character and behavior of a person. If a family brings up their child in the spirit of love and loyalty to the Motherland, this feeling will accompany him throughout his life. President Sh.M. Mirziyoyev said, "The most important condition for the stable and rapid development of the country is to educate well-rounded, goal-oriented and energetic young people who have modern knowledge and skills and can take responsibility for the country's worthy future." In the legacy of Eastern thinkers, the issues of education, especially family upbringing, are given a wide place. They considered the education of children to be the main criterion that determines the fate of the society and the future of the nation. At the heart of their pedagogical views is the idea of a perfect human being as a social ideal.

The purpose of the study: to study the social functions of the family.

Tasks of the research:

- Studying the role of the family in the development of society;
- Review of pedagogical views on family types;
- Analysis of social and pedagogical tasks of the family;
- Learning the roles and their activities in the family;

The analysis of scientific-pedagogical, psychological, physiological, and philosophical works showed that the family is the most important educational environment for a child, and in this environment, behavior, will, character, and worldview, which are considered important for the development of a person, are formed. The child sees the socio-spiritual image of society in the form of a family, understands the essence of society's demands for the first time among this small community, in the process of establishing family relations.

Family relations are relations organized in different directions between parents or persons responsible for the child's development (grandparents) and children. Family relations ensure children's mental and spiritual maturity and bring about a unique activity in parents. In particular, due to the direct influence of children, the scope of their interests and activities expands, their interactions become richer in content, they develop a deeper understanding of the essence of real life, that is, the development of their own life span in the form of children's maturity and future.

Family upbringing plays the main role in the emergence of a person's spiritual qualities, the need and interest in acquiring spiritual knowledge. A healthy spiritual environment in the family is of inestimable importance for children to grow up mature and complete.

Family education has been highly valued in the East since time immemorial. During the totalitarian regime, the role of the family in the education of the individual was denied, and efforts were made to educate him through social existence.

In the years of independence in the Republic of Uzbekistan, the citizens' sense of national identity and the increased interest in studying the values of the past made it possible to objectively assess the role and place of the family in the development of the individual. In this regard, the President of the Republic of Uzbekistan, I.A. Karimov, expresses the following thoughts: "The family is built on the basis of the laws of life and conscience, and has its centuries-old strong and spiritual foundations. Democratic foundations are laid in the family, people's needs and values are formed. The majority of the population of Uzbekistan does not care about their personal well-being, but the safety of their family, relatives and close people, and their neighbors. puts And this is the highest spiritual value, the jewel of the human heart."

The state's concern for the family is reflected in the adopted laws and decisions. The establishment of the "Oila" scientific and practical center in the republic is a clear proof of this.

At any time, society and the state were interested in the steady growth of the population, the preservation of certain traditions and sacred traditions, and their transmission from generation to generation. The great Russian psychologist A.N. Leontev studied the importance of intergenerational communication for the development of society and stated in one of his first works that if there was no such communication, development itself would not be absolute. The role of the family, which is an important part of society, is great in fulfilling this task.

The duties of the family before the society mean its ability to satisfy the specific needs of family members and thereby serve the needs and interests of the state and society. For example, when a father works from morning to night at a manufacturing company, he not only satisfies his needs for eating, drinking, resting, and making various purchases, but also takes care of his family members, first of all, his children, the housewife. In addition, the needs of the spouse, in addition, the increase in profitability in this or that enterprise contributes to the high economic indicators, thereby contributing to the development of this industry in their homeland.

In the scientific literature on family psychology, the following functions of the family - tasks before society are distinguished:

The emotional function of the family is the maintenance of certain warm relations between its members, kindness, mutual care, mutual support, love, is to show the ability to be loved.

The function of providing physical strength refers to the conditions that depend on ensuring that family members are physically healthy, active and feel good, for example, each of us has a shelter in the family, in addition, this is in our area, that is, in our home, we need to have the necessary and comfortable opportunities to relax, enjoy good quality, nutritious food, create and study. Because if any of these are not provided, such a family cannot consider itself happy and will feel a number of inconveniences.

The function of providing spiritual communication arises from a person's desire to have his own lineage, spiritual and cultural traditions, each person is endlessly proud of whose descendants he is, the inheritor of what traditions. No matter what kind of family it is, it will be strong and happy only if it is able to unite its members within the framework of certain good customs and manners.

The function of sexual communication is to satisfy the sexual needs of both husband and wife, thereby ensuring the continuity of generations.

The function of stabilizing happiness and peace is also very important, and it helps to solve the problems of each member of the family, protect it from various external influences, and, if necessary, help to form protective immunity.

Reproductive function is not only the task of the family related to the creation of generations and successors, but also to achieve the happiness of being a father and mother, and the state also serves to maintain a certain amount of indigenous population.

The function of upbringing and control depends on parents to ensure that their children grow up capable and intelligent, religious and healthy. Because the family educates not only the husband and wife, based on their status, but also cares for the young generation so that they grow up to be worthy of their family and parents, and benefit the society.

Conclusion

A separate field of practice in the field of family relations is the preparation of young people for family life. This work is of particular importance in our country, and it is especially important in the conditions where newness and oldness come into conflict. The phenomenon of attraction that is formed during adolescence and adolescence, that is, the emotional connection of individuals to each other - the cultivation of feelings of friendship and love, the creation of conditions for such education is one of the new and bright future fields in our Central Asian conditions. is one. If school psychologists, pedagogues, and social psychologists work together in the implementation of these works, it is possible to apply the obtained conclusions and results to life
