Annotation: This article gives information about effective and important factors to learn a foreign language in education. Furthermore, it touches upon main problems that learners may face in language acquisition and solutions for better language learning.

Key words: language learning strategies, English as a second language, learning styles, time management, learning problems and solutions.

Language learning has become an important part of the society since the world is getting international work and study place for most people who come from different countries. This fact has justified that to learn a foreign language has some problems that have been experiencing by language learners during the process in the real life situations. However, the problems are not the one that do not have solutions, hence most of the scientists over the globe have been doing their research work for finding better solutions to deal with language learning problems and overcoming the barriers that may occur in learning process. So, here are some brief aspects that learners have to look through and make their language learning path easier. Firstly, when the learners decide to study a foreign language, it is preferable to answer to the following questions before starting Language learning journey. Is my mother language is in the same language family with my target language? As we know, that it is a piece of cake if our target language is closely related to our mother tongue. It is because, learners have already understand basics of the language that makes learning process much easier. Moreover, it also means there is less cultural differences between these two languages which makes the process more practicable.

Secondly, another important aspect the learners have to know is learning style they belong to. Studies showed that learning a foreign language is not challenging if learners know style of learning, because they can save their valuable time that they may spend over time in ineffective way of learning, resulting in being unable to speak fluently or understand the basics of the language. thus, it may even cause stress and loose their motivation to study a foreign language. Thirdly, how they are mentally strong to learn a language? Increasingly common language online and offline courses that are advertising their six- or five- or even less-month courses to public are pretending audiences with recognizably dishonest numbers. The psychology of each person is unique that defines the six-month period might not be enough for learners as whole. Researchers advice learners to find out their own personal mental strength so that they may acknowledge their real ability towards language learning and count the exact amount of time that should be spend on the language.

Fourthly, it is important to know how much time learners can spend on learning target language. It is clear, most of us promise ourselves to reach a specific level during specific amount of time, although, we are not often capable of making our promises true. We get ambitious to set time limit. After a while we will find ourselves exhausted due to unfair time schedule. Researches show that if we work at the same time with studying we may have practice only an hour in a day. The amount of hours do not matter if learners fully comprehend the language and instruction during the learning process.

Fifthly, to make a plan. Planning is the key of success. Planning leads productivity, productivity leads success. Perfect planning day will affect entire life as we can control our time. Plus, beginning level learners will achieve well-organized day, month and year seeing progress on their foreign language acquisition.

Sixthly, the most important question for finding answer by learners “Why I want to learn the language? Brief and clear goal is vital during language learning process. There are huge amount of contributing factors of exact goal that leads to be the master of the language in this modern world. First and foremost, they know why they are here that means whenever they feel unmotivated, their goal makes them full of energy again. Moreover, the goal they are putting should be reasonable. For example, is it for education or for CV that is often quite important in hiring process.

Above suggested questions are really helpful to start and go on in the foreign language learning. However, there are also 3 major problems of language learning that learners should take into account.

Differences between cultures one of the biggest problem that learners will not able to reach expected level of fluency unless they do not learn the language with its culture. Otherwise, the difference may pose cultural misunderstanding and confusion, as learning a foreign language means communicating in that language.

Anxiety about other people’s opinions is also really problematic for the learners who are especially shy and timid. Many people are afraid of speaking in their target language, because they think others may laugh at them. In this case, they have to keep in mind, there is always judgement about anyone, anywhere. The reason is that people always talk about each other all the time and this changes nothing. Strong people never listen unworthy people’s comments, so that they make their dreams come true. Language methodologists suggest if learners feel worried or under pressure when they speak in a second or target language, to watch blogs of bloggers who experienced the same worries. They talk about their stories of how they become confident.

Over expectation also may disappoint ambitious learners, because learning a language is long and challenging process that takes time, hard work and dedication. Most learners expect more but achieve less, so that they think it is not possible to be advanced in another language. They give up. If the learners don’t get the level of fluency that they dreamed, no need to worry, as long as they did their best, the only problem is that their brain is not able to do more than their result.

In conclusion, language learning is a long way journey, that may last lifetime. The journey becomes fruitful, when learners keep motivated and know how to deal with language problems without giving up.
